Construction

Adria uses tried and tested materials and proven methods in caravan body construction, such as GFK, a lightweight, high-strength composite material combining plastic with glass fibres, which we further reinforce. Walls are strengthened by composite slats, the roof and floor core by XPS Extruded Polystyrene, a rigid closed cell foam insulation material with high moisture-resistance, compressive strength and consistent thermal performance. Panel is used around the windows, and a polyester layer is added to the floor construction. The result is a strong, durable body you can rely on.

Alpina uses Adria's unique 'Comprex' body construction, which combines the torsional strength of wood, the durability of polyurethane, and the moisture-stopping properties of polyester for reliable long-term durability and performance.

Please check www.adria-mobil.com for individual model specifications and technical details.
